

A book aimed squarely at bird watchers, birders, naturalists, and those splendid people buying them presents. A review of the first edition of this book described it as an accessible, inclusive birding book that will initiate even the most neophyte bird watcher into the ins and outs and faux pas of birder culture with humorous asides and self-deprecating wit. But don't mistake Keen for the light-hearted Dave Barry of birding. At the heart of the book is the much more serious theme of how we relate (or fail to relate) to nature. Books like Keen's that can inspire and nurture the birder within us deserve widespread readership. Another reviewer wrote: "Jam packed with info that both novice and experienced birders will love, and his sharp wit and humor throughout will guarantee a good laugh. You will see birds in a completely different light, and will be compelled to immediately run out and buy a decent pair of binoculars to watch them." This, the second edition, is substantially expanded, now comprising 55 affectionate, humorous or thoughtful essays on all aspects of bird watching. Sometimes funny, sometimes a practical guide, and sometimes philosophical, it will resonate with anyone interested in the world of nature.
