

Until January 1994, no one knew what the infamous mutineer, Fletcher Christian, looked like. There were some written descriptions of him noted in Captain Bligh's log-book; nevertheless, Fletcher's looks escaped the general imagination. I stayed as a guest of Fletcher's descendants for 3 months on the Bounty Island as a part of an overall 5-month expedition to the South Seas in 1993. I would make an image of Fletcher. Then, in January 1994, with the help of Merseyside Police identikit computer, and filmed by the BBC, we created a computerised image of Fletcher, a world first. I fed the computer with my research of his ancestors and merged with the images of some of his descendants. I mixed in the living spirit of Pitcairn. It has been my privilege to have then created a drawing of Fletcher Christian – the first to do so since he became infamous at the end of the 18th Century. There have been several follow-ons, and claims of others of getting to make a "portrait" first, but the record books will be evidence based on my visit to the Island, work with the BBC, and Merseyside Police. I nevertheless respect, acknowledge later claims of others who have made studio images of Fletcher. Art is free. I defend every artist's right to be creative, and so I support those who have built upon my expedition to Pitcairn in 1993 and my work to build a portrait of Fletcher in 1994. I too have sat on the shoulders of everyone linked to this story in order to make this project. I am in deep gratitude to Fletcher Christian and everyone, past and present, involved in the saga. We all have a contribution to make for posterity. The later duplicates demonstrate that there seems to be an enduring interest in the wish to record images of deceased celebs such as Fletcher Christian. For example, the Daily Mail newspaper contacted me in 1994 to enquire whether I would construct an image of Queen Boadicea. I declined that opportunity at the time as I was immersed in other arts projects. Clearly there is much scope for artists in this field and I for one salute all artists who make a contribution in this field. My time spent researching Fletcher Christian, including a visit to Pitcairn Island in 1993 to meet his descendants seems not to have been wasted, but rather and humbly, it is my contribution, as suggested, to the overall saga. It is my privilege to present the world's first recorded image of Fletcher Christian. I presume, sir, in painting your beautiful portrait, you took your idea of me from my principles, and not from my person.....Abraham Lincoln
