

Spy tactics are a never ending goal for the Middle East country of Iraq, especially when they maintain Istanbul, Turkey, as a major hideout. Their "mole," former US Army officer, Paul Remmich, is discovered in Cuba by a US Army counterintelligence group. Lieutenant Colonel Miller has been a close friend for many years, and is one of a group of CIC in Cuba searching for AWOLs and spies that defected from the Army in Germany and absconded with highly classified information. It was by chance that Remmich is found, not at first by his face, but by a weird manipulating tactic that only he could perform with a used matchbook. The story unfolds further back in Germany at INSCOM's V Corps when Miller is targeted for espionage tactics, but only after he's subconsciously programmed. The plot thickens when the hypnotized friend is lectured by his spy officers on how to begin a brainwashing talk with Miller, followed by beer drugging. Remmich succeeds. The underground protagonists, Tara Yako and Adnaw Alzuhari, accomplish a temporary kidnapping for a premeditated hypnotizing of Miller. What are the results of acquiring two MI officers? It seems to be clearly a skill that only espionage can accomplish. The approach is cunning, while the outcome is a devastating reality, or a positive accomplishment, but for which country? Can Iraq's plan work a second time? A tiny mistake in the process of a planned procedure could jeopardize the entire scheme. Eventually, Miller becomes aware of Remmich's personality to be from the same hypnotizing conditioning and subconscious desire to do well for the Tariq'Allah. But, none of this information is reported to congressional members, like the Foreign Relations Committee, the House Select Committee on Intelligence Oversight, and the Army's Chiefs. But, withholding it from getting outside of the US Army's INSCOM's grips could prevent serious legal complications. It's now a tug war between the US Army and Iraq. The story ends and the Russians finish a job well done. The story gives the reader a distinct realization of current events that only this author can present. Who wins?
